1.3 To summarize Who is this rewriter?

Rewriters are specialists who, on the basis of texts borrowed from various sources, create new unique texts that are similar in meaning to the source. This profession appeared relatively recently, but very quickly became in demand.

The thing is that with the development of the Internet and an increase in the number of web resources (sites, blogs, forums, etc.), the need for unique content has sharply increased, and it has become more difficult to produce it. Therefore, it is much easier for many site owners to buy remade other people's articles than to spend time and effort on creating their own copyright.

Like other activities related to writing texts, working as a rewriter requires compliance with a number of rules. I will name the most important of them.

The texts should not contain speculation and fiction.

Rewrite does not imply dilution of the material with the personal opinion of the author.

Changing the text should not go to the detriment of its semantic content.

If rewriting is done from a specific source, you should not supplement it with information from other sources (unless this has been agreed with the customer in advance).

Writers make money in two ways. The first way is selling ready-made texts. That is, a person analyzes the market, finds the most popular topics and does rewriting.
