Such questions are not rare at all. It's a usual thing a person writes something there, and he even seems to get it readers (relatives, friends, classmates, colleagues) like it. But he himself realizes, if, of course, he is a thinking author, and not a graphomaniac, that everything can be much better. He reads popular bloggers on the Internet and thinks bitterly: this is talent, I can't do that. He stumbles upon a cool advertisement in a magazine, and again exclaims with enthusiasm and not without envy: "Wow, you have to come up with this!" That I answer such questions. Of course, the main task of the training is to bring a person into the profession (blogger, copywriter, journalist) in the shortest possible time so that he starts earning money. But we do not impose anything on anyone, a person can dispose of the acquired knowledge as he pleases. Are you planning to earn copywriting? No problem, teach. Do you dream of being published in the press? We will help turn your dream into reality. Do you want to write "for yourself"? Write, we guarantee that after the training your ability to translate thoughts into text and, therefore, self-esteem will soar at times.

Another question is why. Why do this for yourself? Why spend time and money mastering the most valuable writing skill in an interesting and competent way, so that you don't share your happiness with anyone and get nothing in return? Yes, to be able to write is happiness. Everyone who practices this sacrament with love will agree with me. The very process of the birth of the text, when thoughts magically and easily obediently fall on paper, is able to immerse the writer in a state of real euphoria, when time and the world around him seem to dissolve. There is only you and your brainchild. And if the result is something that, in your opinion, is worthwhile, there is no limit to joy. You are satisfied with yourself and want to create more and more.

But the greatest happiness is still not this. You experience an incomparable sense of satisfaction when others appreciate your work. So in any case, right? An artist cannot paint "on the table". And the singer will eventually get tired of singing in the SOUL when others, less vociferous, gather stadiums. And even a simple shoemaker, since it is customary today to consider writing not as creativity, but as a craft, there will not be enough cabinets for all the shoes "for yourself". Therefore, when a person says that he wants to write for himself, I have every reason not to believe him. Forgive me for being straightforward.

By the way, during the training we identify and eliminate all the reasons for this "for ourselves". And not a single one has left us with his former "modest" intention. Everyone writes to the world, and it is not at all necessary to embark on the path of journalism and copywriting. Ways to declare yourself for a good author of a lot. And not just to find application for their abilities, but to earn money. Why not! Does anyone need money? Show me this Neanderthal man.
